

JASON WRIGHT

New York Times Bestselling Author

"Jason Wright's 'Big Moments and Little Moments' presentation was an exciting way to encourage students to find ways to treat each other with kindness and respect. His storytelling and student involvement combined for a dynamic, engaging assembly. The on-going value is that we continue to reference 'what Mr. Wright said' as we remind students that the 'little' things we do for each other each day can have a huge impact on other people, our school and our community. Unlike other presentations that are 'over' as soon as the students leave the auditorium, Jason's message endures." -- Gina Stetter, Principal, Peter Muhlenberg Middle School

Overview:

We don't always need parents or teachers to tell us when or how to perform mini-miracles in the lives of people around us. We simply need to have our eyes open to the opportunities.

Students will learn that life isn't about "Big Moments." Life is about the precious seconds we donate every day to serve one another. Our lives will not be defined by pre-scheduled, pre-planned or dramatic scenes of service or sacrifice. Joining a club, picking up litter or building an orphanage isn't the measure of greatness. Those things are nice, but greatness is about today.

What are students doing today to make a difference? Opening a door? Befriending the new kid?

We live in a "me-first" world. Jason understands this because he's been a "me-first" person most of his life. This program will inspire students to think "you-first".

Author Bio:
